Thoroughbred racing needs no tonic, but it does demand careful watching lest the growing interest in the invigorating sport leads to a freedom in betting which those who control its destinies are trying so hard to prevent. The courts have decreed that oral betting is not against the law, and regulations have been laid down for the proper conduct of all betting at the track. These regulations must be enforced. The arrest of eleven men on Thursday for overstepping the bounds, as it were, may not be justified later in the courts, but in point of fact it will make for good and teach a proper lesson to those who shaved the strict letter of the law at the risk of damaging the sport. It seems utterly absurd, of course, that a man cannot make a cash wager with the same freedom as he can make an oral wager with an individual so long as there is no exposing of prices and general solicitation of wagers, which the courts construe as public bookmaking. Whether absurd or not, however, the fact remains that cash betting at the racetrack is not allowed, and those who do it under cover not only are risking arrest but jeopardizing to some extent the new and healthy growth of racing.

When Buckhorn won the Brooklyn

When Buckhorn won the Brooklyn Handicap on Tuesday in a driving finish with Buskin and Rock View the enthusiasm of the big crowd furnished striking evidence of what the sport means to so many. When a crop of yearlings was sold in the sales paddock at Sheepshead last Monday for an average of $1,000 a head, further evidence was furnished of renewed interest and growing confidence on the part of those who like to see their colors up. Breeders have reason to feel encouraged. It follows, then, that the greatest care should be exercised in fostering the breeding industry, which means so much to any country, by controlling those who care only for the wager and nothing for the sport except as a means to an end.

No golden harvest will be reaped in organized baseball this year. Salaries have gone up and receipts have come down. The Federal League is responsible for the first reason, even if not for the second. In talking with a man closely identified with one of the big major league clubs last week the suggestion was scouted that the so-called outlaws had cut into the attendance figures. He put the shrinkage down to general business depression and what general falling off, and for the reason that the federals have not be general falling off, and for the reason that the fans are heartily sick of baseball in the courts. They want baseball in the courts. They want baseball in the courts and briefs. After all, then, the Federal League is largely responsible for the vanishing profits of organized baseball, although the plight is not so unhappy as some would have the fans believe. Quite a few are still going to the parks each day.

There is more reason just now for a the court of the court of

There is more reason just now for a general and widespread interest in baseball than is usually the case at this point of the race. Six teams in the past. Victories on track and the American League are so well the American League are so well part, too, for the loss of the rowing this point of the race. Six teams in the Marican League are so well bunched that the Chicago White Sox, is sixth place, are only about five games behind the Philadelphia Athletics, in first. The Washington Senators, in spite of the disastrous slump in the West, are within easy striking distance of the world's champions, while Detroit, St. Louis and Boston are hanging on in great style and threatening every step of the way. Not in several years has the struggle been so close, and also so uncertain.

The same thing almost may be said.

For the first time in several years of the struggle.

For the first time in several years it seems absolutely futile to rank the various college baseball teams with any degree of fairness. Complex situations have arisen in the past but never in my experience have the scores beard so muddled or the problem so hard of solution. There is not a peg apparently on which to hang even a reasonable theory why one team or another should be placed at the top. To give some idea of the maxe into which comparative scores lead it may be recalled that Princeton won the odd game in the particular of the world by Jack holmson, Frank Moran, of Pittsburgh, Johnson and Frinceton, that Cornell won the odd game in the series with Yale, that Harvard beat Princeton, that Columbia beat Pennsylvania in two games, that Yale and Cornell beat following that Rrown beat Yale faired, that Princeton beat Brown, that Dartmouth. Anybody who wants to unravel this tangle is well-come to the job.

If anything, Cornell, Pennsylvania and Harvard were the most consistent throughout the season and deserve true leading honors, but the University of Michigan comes forward with as just a THE TURF.

Harvard, Yale and Princeton were closely matched, but the Crimson nine led all others in team batting, which is something to be said in its favor. Pennsylvania fairly smothered Harvard by a score of 12 to 2, and boasted a well developed team, particularly, with Sayre in the box. And there you are. [By Telegraph to The Tribune ] Cincinnati, June 28.—The Cincinnati Reds defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates in both games of the double header in both games of the double header here this afternoon, and climbed back into second place in the league standing. The scores were 7 to 6 and 1 to 0. Incidentally, the Pirates were forced back into the second division, as the Cardinals, by their even break with the Cubs, moved up into fourth place. In the first game Pittsburgh was leading, at 6 to 2, at the eighth inning, when the Reds by a batting rally in the last frame, thanks to the wildness of the visitors' pitcher, scored five runs.

It begins to look as if the Resolute was just enough better than the Vanitie and the Defiance to insure her selection as the yacht to defend the America's cup from Sir Thomas Lipton's fourth Shamrock off Sandy Hook next September. There is every reason to believe that she can be improved from time to time, as little faults crop out, as readily as the Vanitie or the Defiance. There is promise of much keen racing before the selection finally is made, but the races on the Sound last week established a confidence in the Herreshoff boat which will be hard to shake. Flukes or no flukes, luck or no luck, the yacht which keeps on winning commands respect.

True, Sandy Hook is a long way from yards where the boats may be pulled out for polishing and repairs, but the same can be said for Newport, so far at least as two of the yachts are concerned. It is not too late to rearrange the schedule and hold at least three more races off the Hook some time in August, but it is not likely to be done.	FIRST GAME.  CINCINNATI N. L. PITTSBURGH N.
